Summer Safety For Children

Summer is here again. This is the season, next to Christmas, that children love the most. Long, sunny days which offer active youngsters a chance to release pent up energies provide many happy hours of pleasure. Hopefully, these days will also provide many safe hours when children can run, jump, throw, and climb.

Such outdoor activities as these are not only great fun, but also are vitally important to a child's development. Running, jumping, throwing, and climbing are all skills which need practice if children's large muscles are to develop to their maximum potential. So it is important that adults as parents, grandparents, and others who will be spending time with children this summer - take a few precautions which will insure that outdoor play will be a safe, happy, and stimulating experience for their children.

Elaborate outdoor play equipment is not necessary, but it is important to be sure that any equipment is safe and in good working order. It is maintainance time for tricycles and bicycles. Check chains and pedals on these. Are they rusty or worn. If so, they should be replaced.

If you have a swing set, check for rust. Be sure the nuts and bolts are in place and are not worn. Is the swing set properly anchored? Remember your children are a few pounds heavier this year and the swing set will require a thorough anchoring.

Look around for danger spots in the yard. Are there any bits of broken glass, rusty nails or other potentially dangerous objects about the yard or playing area? Be sure that boundaries are clearly defined so that children know where they may and may not play.

Most children love small swimming and wading pools. These are fun, but can be very dangerous. Never leave water in such a pool. A small child can drown in less than one inch of water. Never, never leave a small child alone in a swimming pool, no matter how small it is.

These are a few summer safety precautions. You will think of others. Think safety and fun for your children this summer. Have a safe summer everyone.
